

Study: Savings Possible by Shutting Down Nuclear Power Plant

A study commissioned by an anti-nuclear group says Pacific Northwest ratepayers could save hundreds of millions of dollars if the Bonneville Power Administration and Energy Northwest close the region's only commercial nuclear power plant.

Feb. 21, 2017, at 4:08 p.m.

FILE--In this April 8, 2003, file photo, steam rises from Energy Northwest's Columbia Generating Station, Washington state's only nuclear power plant, near Richland, Wash. A new study says Pacific Northwest ratepayers could save hundreds of millions of dollars if the Bonneville Power Administration and Energy Northwest close the region's only commercial nuclear power plant and replace its output with renewable energy. (AP Photo/Jackie Johnston, file) THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

AP

PORTLAND, Ore. (AP) — A new study says Pacific Northwest ratepayers could save hundreds of millions of dollars if the Bonneville Power Administration and Energy Northwest close the region's only commercial nuclear power plant and replace its output with renewable energy.

The Oregonian/OregonLive reports (<http://bit.ly/2LJ7Z7q>) that the Portland-based McCullough Research consulting firm estimated savings from $261.2 million to $530.7 million over 10 years due to historically low renewable energy prices.

The report was commissioned by the anti-nuclear group Physicians for Social Responsibility and is the latest salvo against the aging plant.

Energy Northwest, a public utility consortium that operates the plant, is criticizing the report.

It says saying the plant had set generating records in four of the past five years.

Bonneville says the plant's power-generating capacity is critical when water conditions are low.

Copyright 2017 The Associated Press. All rights reserved. This material may not be published, broadcast, rewritten or redistributed.

Tags: Oregon, Washington, California

Latest Videos

More videos:

Popular Articles

New Mobile Networks Set to Enable Remote Driving, Telefonica Says

Appeals Court Will Not Put Trump Travel Ban Case on Hold

Macron's Bid for French Presidency Gathering Momentum: Two Polls

Kyrgyz Opposition Leader Arrested on Eve of Putin Visit

Poll: Majority Think Media Too Hard on Trump